It was a normal day at school, I was happy because I got there early. After a couple minutes of walking, it happened. Somehow a humongous backpack got in the school. I was totally stupefied then it moved! Finally I got to my class. Strangely not a lot of people were there.

Usually all my class would have been there. I thought to myself, "maybe the backpack ate them." While I was going to check the backpack but I noticed that it had gotten bigger! I was sitting there pondering it over when it happened.

The backpack lunged at me. Luckily I anticipated the attack and I jumped out of the way, dodging its mouth. Then I pulled out my razor sharp ruler slashing at its head. After a few more repeats of this process I defeated him. What I wanted to know was who was in the backpack.

Soon after getting it open all my friends popped out. Then G said, "gotcha!" "What are you talking about," I asked. "We just pulled the best prank of all time, and we got it on film too," he replied. "Oh," I said, "that makes total sense." Then we all laughed away while walking back to class.

Score Point: 5

This response reflects a strong degree of proficiency in narrative writing skills. The writer organizes the response through time with effective transitions (somehow, strangely, usually, and luckily). Specific details are provided to develop the narrative and illustrate key ideas. Syntactic variety and sophisticated word choice are displayed through dialogue and complex sentence structure (I was totally stupefied, I was sitting there pondering it over, and I anticipated the attack). The writing is generally free from errors in conventions. Further development would be required for a higher score.
